RCA President Stepping Down at AGM

Mary Grace Linton has been the proud President of the Renfrew Community Association for the past six years. She started to attend the Jellybean Dances and became the Events Director in 2017.

"I like to know what is going on in the community", she says. "Being the President, you have a finger in all the committees and groups, and you build a special bond with key people in the community."

Her vision was engagement, bringing the community together by offering events and a place for members to meet and engage. Notable changes during her tenure included hiring two staff members, renovating the main hall, and introducing a new, brighter logo.

"I am grateful for this opportunity and thank you for trusting me in this role," she says. Mary Grace will pass the torch to someone new at the Annual General Meeting on November 20.

RCA Social Room

The RCA Social Room, affectionately known as "the pub" by regular members, is a hidden gem in the heart of Renfrew. Located in the basement of the community centre, the Social Room is a relaxed spot that is part neighbourhood pub and part game room. It's open to RCA members and their guests, and minors can join when supervised by a parent.

"Come down to the pub with your friends and families and enjoy a Friday night out with cheap drinks and games," says Brent, the Social Room Director. He joined the RCA Board "to contribute and meet folks from around the neighbourhood, and to be a bartender." Since filling the director role, he gave some TLC to the bar area, secured the donation of a solid foosball table, and replaced the sound system.

"It's a fun environment," says Brent. "There's a shuffleboard, pool table, foosball, and dart set. We also have board games and books. You are welcome to bring your own games, and your own food."

"We need to get the word out that we are open every Friday more consistently," he says. The pub had inconsistent opening hours since COVID and that has impacted attendance. Check out the RCA Events Calendar on our website to stay up to date on themed nights and other special events.

You Don't Need to Be a Storyteller to Tell a Good Story

Most of us tell stories every day without thinking much about it. We tell a coworker what happened on the weekend, explain an experience to a friend, or share an example during a meeting. Learning to tell those stories a little better can make us more engaging speakers and stronger communicators.

Here are three simple ways to make your stories more effective:

1. Start with a Moment
You don't need to explain everything that happened. Pick one moment that captures the experience and start there. A specific moment is often more interesting than a long introduction.

2. Include the Details That Matter
A few well-chosen details help people picture what happened. What did you see? What were you thinking? How did you feel? You don't need every detail—just enough to bring people into the story.

3. Know Why You're Telling It
The best stories have a reason behind them. Maybe you want to make someone laugh, explain an idea, share something you learned, or help someone see a situation differently. Knowing your purpose helps you decide what belongs in the story.

Storytelling is a skill, and like any skill, it gets better with practice.

High Riser Toastmasters meets every Thursday from 7:15 pm to 8:15 pm at the Bridgeland-Riverside Community Association Centre.

Guests are always welcome for free. Find out more at highriser.toastmastersclubs.org.

A FRESH PERSPECTIVE

Remembering and Reconnecting

by Rebecca Pink

November gives us a moment to pause and honour, with deep gratitude, those who served and sacrificed for others, and those who continue to serve today. It is also a reminder that remembering is something we all carry in different ways. Remembrance is not limited to one day or one kind of loss, it can take many shapes, often quietly woven into our everyday lives. Sometimes remembering brings comfort; other times, it brings sadness, longing, or emotions we weren't expecting. There is no right way to remember or feel. We can continue to try to make room for whatever comes, with a little gentleness and self-compassion,

Grief is something that many people carry quietly. I know this from my own experience as well. It can be complicated, heavy, and unpredictable, bringing waves of emotions that can shift from one day to the next. We don't always talk about it, and sometimes we may feel as though we are expected to "move on" or "be fine". However, grief doesn't follow a timeline and is never linear. We can make room for both the sadness of what is no longer here and the gratitude for once was.

November can be a challenging month for many of us. The days grow shorter, the temperatures drop, and for many of us, our energy shifts with the season. Rather than seeing this as something we need to push through, maybe it can be an invitation to slow down and check in with ourselves. What might you need a little more of right now? Rest? Connection? Time for yourself and your loved ones?

November gives us an opportunity to pause, remember, and reconnect. We might reach out to someone we haven't spoken to in a while, revisit a memory, or make a little more room for the people and experiences that matter to us. For those carrying grief, these moments of connection can be especially meaningful. Sometimes remembering together is a way of reminding ourselves that we don't have to carry it alone.

As we move through November, I also want to take a moment to remember and honour those who have served and continue to serve, and the families who stand alongside them.

Lest We Forget.
